Hi Bill:

Thank you for consenting to service by email. We agree that you may withdraw this consent by notifying us that you wish to withdraw the consent.

Regarding our discovery plan discussion on August 28th, I want to clarify what my position was. I had prepared a proposed joint discovery plan without reference to a protective order. You redlined the proposed plan to include a clause stating that you anticipated that Defendant may seek to designate portions of its records confidential and that you would agree to a protective order so long as your son Jeffrey Hu could review the records Defendant produces to assist you with the case. As you will recall, I informed you that I did not see a need for a protective order and did not have an issue with your son reviewing discovery documents in this case.

To confirm, our client is not seeking a protective order at this time. We do not object to your son Jeffrey Hu reviewing the discovery documents.

Hi Mary,

You asked us earlier if we would like to consent to service by email moving forward for this case; yes, we consent to service by email moving forward. Each party should have the right to withdraw this consent upon written notice. Please confirm that we can move forward with this.

Also like to confirming one point from 8/28's conference. Our understanding is that Defendant does not object to disclosure of material designated confidential to Jeffrey Hu, who assists us in preparing this case, subject to his signing a written undertaking to be bound by the protective order. Please let me know if we have misstated your position, or if you would prefer to address it in the stipulated protective order you propose.

Regards.
Yibiao (Bill)
